Latest Type of Steel Battle Aeroplane United States Army and Navy Are Trying Out

First photograph of the new type of Sturtevant battle aeroplane, which has been attracting much attention in the United States army and navy circles. It is twice the size of the ordinary aeroplane and besides mountings for two gun turrets has a torpedo body. The new flyer is built of lighter-than-wood vanadium steel throughout and is driven by 140-horsepower motors. The machine is said to be simpler, stronger and more effective than any flyer yet constructed.
